The Hamilton Family

IN AMERICA

Among the great families of the world the Hamiltons hold no mean place; and in the roster of eminent men, its full proportion of historic names are to be found. In war and diplomacy, in science and literature, its sons have won places of distinction—not alone as British noblemen, but equally as marked among the democracy of America.

Of English origin, the principal seat of its Dukes is in Scotland; while thousands of its lesser members dwell in the north of Ireland. And from all of these has the American branch been recruited.

Delving among the records of our earliest colonial days, we learn that about 1620 David Hamilton was born, near Glasgow, Scotland (on the river Clyde, by which access was had to the sea). When in process of time the long contest between Cromwell's men and the forces of Charles II. came to its final issue, David was found fighting on the side of the King. Unfortunately for him,—or mayhap fortune in disguise,—after the battle of Worcester, September 3, 1651, he was numbered among the prisoners of the great Protector, and marched off to London, to grace the triumphal entry of the victor; who as a reward for his fealty to the defeated monarch and penalty for lack of speed, in retreat, ordered him deported, with others who like himself were inimical to the de facto Government.

On board the good ship “John & Sarah” they sailed for New England, from Gravesend, November 8, 1651, little knowing what awaited them in an unknown land, reaching their undesired haven early in the following year. Misfortune still had for them a bitter cup, and soon after their arrival at Charlestown, Mass., they were sold to service for a limited term.

When his term of service expired, David went to Dover, N. H., and there was joined in marriage to Anna (daughter of Richard Jackson, who had also been one of the same ship’s company). Settling thereafter in that part of the town, later called Rollinsfold, he died on September 28, 1691. Many of his descendants may still be found in the vicinity of Waterboro, Me.

Another early settler was William Hamilton (whose parentage and place of birth is unknown), who was born in 1643, emigrated to and settled at Danbury, Conn., and passed away in 1746 at the great age of 103, leaving a son, who was eighty-six, at death.

There was at Coheco, where he was taxed in 1667, one Daniel Hamilton, who was again of record in 1693, at Eastham, Mass., and of whom nothing further is known.

Gabriel Hamilton, the date of whose arrival is unknown, dwelt for some time at New London, Conn., removing thence to Berwick, York county, Maine, where he evidently prospered; for after his death in 1730 his estate was valued, on appraisal, at 750 pounds sterling. His descendants were numerous in that county at the end of the century.

Subsequently Ambrose Hamilton, a Scotchman, with his three sons, arrived at Portland, where the young men in 1760 purchased property in Cumberland county: Ambrose at Chebeague island, Roland on Cousins island, and John at Walnut Hills, in the section back of Yarmouth.

Probably coming from the north of Ireland, James Hamilton was registered in Worcester, Mass., in 1716, and became a settler in Palmer. His brother, John, who was born on shipboard, May 21, 1716, while their parents were on route to America, eventually located at Pelham, Mass., where he died June 10, 1799, leaving a large family with Mary Lockhart, his widow.

Another James Hamilton was at Solebury, Bucks county, Pa., as early as 1713, his death being recorded in 1751.

When the first census of the United States was taken in 1790, several families were found at St. Michaels, Talbot county, Md., who claimed to have descended from William Hamilton, an early immigrant to that colony.

Virginia was the chosen destination of a multitude of immigrants from the British Isles, following the settlers who came with Capt. John Smith in 1608. Among those who came over in 1697 was William, well educated and full of ambition, who probably landed at Cape Charles; as he was still in Northampton county in 1706. Removing to Kent county, Md., in 1708, his legal attainments soon brought him into prominence, and he was engaged to codify the Provincial Statutes, in 1715. Knowledge of the merits of that work having preceded him, he was induced to move once more and in 1717 was appointed Attorney General at Philadelphia; became a member of the Provincial Council in 1720; was Master of the High Court of Chancery in 1723; Speaker of the Assembly in 1729, and delivered a notable address on his retirement from that position in 1739. In 1735 he served as Counsel for John P. Zanger, who had been indicted for treason in New York, making a masterly plea for "freedom of the press," and was successful, despite the charge of Chief Justice DeLancey, in securing a verdict of acquittal for his client. Knowing that he had taken the case without fee or hope of reward, the citizens and Corporation joined in presenting him with the "freedom of the city"—suitably enclosed. For legal services to Pennsylvania he received a valuable estate known as "Bush Hill," in the City of Philadelphia, where he resided until his death, in 1741. His son James, born in 1710, was prominent in public affairs, became Deputy Governor of the Province, being highly esteemed, and died in 1783.

James Hamilton, of whose ancestry we have no definite record, was born May 8, 1786, at Charleston, S. C. Educated with a view to entering the legal profession, he entered instead the military service of the State, going as a Captain in 1812 on an expedition to Canada, and returning as Major. Entering then the practice of the law, he became prominent as an advocate and politician, and was elected Mayor of his native city, serving several terms; was sent to the State Legislature, and later to Congress.

President Jackson offered him a place in his Cabinet, which he declined; as he did also that of Minister to Mexico. He became Governor of South Carolina in 1830, and favored the Nullification Act, so called.

Becoming interested in the affairs of Texas, he was sent in 1841 as minister to England and France for that republic, and as such secured recognition of her independence, and in 1845 actively aided her entrance into the United States. Being sought by his native state as successor to John C. Calhoun, as U. S. senator, he declined.

Having expended his fortune in the service of, (and been elected to the Senate of the United States for,) Texas, he was on his way to that state by steamer, when she came into collision with another vessel, near the Texan coast. It became necessary that the steamer's passengers should take to her boats; he gave place to a lady, and went down to death in November, 1857, thus closing a brilliant and eventful career.

Undoubtedly the most distinguished of the Hamiltons of America was the noted author, soldier, lawyer, and statesman, Alexander Hamilton, who was born January 11, 1757, at Charlestown, island of Nevis, West Indies. His father, James Hamilton, (a younger son of Alexander, of Grange, Lanarkshire, Scotland,) had established himself as a merchant on Nevis island; and through business misfortune became bankrupt. The death of both parents left him, at the age of twelve, an orphan, with scant education.

Nicholas Cruger, a relative of his mother, took the young lad into his counting-house at Christiansted, island of St. Croix. There his mastery of the details of the business was so rapid and complete that within two years he was entrusted with its management, while his guardian visited England. The extraordinary executive capacity which he manifested during that period in conducting the correspondence incident to the position, and the literary ability displayed in describing the destructiveness of the great hurricane which devastated the islands, caused his friends to send him to New York to finish his education, and he reached Boston in October, 1772, going thence to New York. He prepared for college at Elizabeth, N. J., and entered Kings (now Columbia) in 1773.

Taking an active part in the discussions that preceded the Revolution, he gained a reputation for controversial acumen, and in July, 1774, he made a fiery speech at the "fields," where the City Hall is now located. On the breaking out of hostilities, he proceeded to organize an artillery company, of which he became commander in 1776. The conspicuous excellence of that military organization was soon recognized by Gen. Nathaniel Greene, who introduced young Hamilton to Washington, who after observing him at the conflict on Long Island, and later at White Plains, called him to headquarters and made him his private secretary, with rank as lieutenant colonel, a position which he filled with distinctive ability until 1761, when through a mistaken appearance of neglect he was chided by the General for "disrespect," thereby causing him immediately to tender his resignation.

While at Albany in 1777, on a confidential mission from Gen. Washington to Gens. Gates and Putnam, he had met the daughter of Gen. Phillip Schuyler, and in 1780 she became his wife; thus allying him with one of the most influential families of New York. Having been assigned to command an infantry battalion, he greatly distinguished himself by heading an assaulting column at the battle of Yorktown. In 1782 he acted as Receiver of Continental Taxes at New York; became a member of the Continental Congress later. After leaving congress he was admitted to the bar and took up legal practice, being retained in a number of cases, in the arguing of which he displayed great forensic power.

Active in the organization of the Society of the Cincinnati, he joined in the movement for a stronger government, and as a member of the Annapolis convention, he drafted the committee report that brought about the calling of a constitutional convention at Philadelphia in 1786, at which our Federal Constitution was formulated, and signed by him on behalf of New York, entering at once with characteristic energy into the campaign for its adoption.

Six months after the establishment of the Government, he was selected by the President for the important position of Secretary of the Treasury. Here his qualifications as an executive, and conciseness in argument, were manifest, gaining for him an influence second to none of his confreres.

Resigning from the cabinet in 1795, he still kept in close touch with all public affairs, and in 1798, on recommendation of the commander-in-chief, he was commissioned major general, appointed inspector general, thereby becoming the virtual head of the army, which place he held till June 15, 1800.

In the ensuing national campaign, Aaron Burr failing of election as Vice-President, attributed his defeat to the influence of Hamilton, sending him a challenge. Although personally opposed to duelling, he was constrained to yield to the custom of the times, when his capacity for public usefulness was at its highest, falling a victim to the despicable spirit of revenge that actuated his detestably egotistical adversary, his death occurring August 11, 1804.

His son, James Alexander Hamilton, born in 1787, was a Colonel during the war of 1812; was American Minister at the court of the Czar under President Jackson, which post he filled to the satisfaction of his countrymen and credit to himself; departing from life in 1878.

HAMILTONS IN THE 1790 CENSUS

The first census of the United States was taken in 1790. It comprised an enumeration of the heads of families, with the number of members of each family, in the present states of Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Vermont and Virginia. The returns for the states of Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, New Jersey, Tennessee and Virginia were destroyed when the British burned the capitol in Washington, during the war of 1812. The original schedules of the other states are now preserved in the census office in Washington. The loss of the Virginia records has been in a measure made up by the state enumerations of the years 1782, 1783, 1784 and 1785 and by certain county tax lists.

At the time this census was taken the total white population of the United States was 3,172,444 and the heads of families enumerated were 410,636. The heads of the enumerated families were practically the founders of the republic.

In the list that follows, arranged by states, the Christian name of each head of family is first given and then the name of the place of residence, the county of the state and the number of males and females in the family, respectively designated m. and fm.:
